GOLDEN CIRCLE TOUR (FROM REYKJAVIK) - 09 AUG 2023

The first stop will be at the Thingvellir National Park - the only place on Earth where the mid-Atlantic rift, dividing the American and Eurasian Continental Plates, is visible above sea-level. The next visit is Geysir - Iceland's famous geyser which can hurl up boiling water to heights reaching 70 meters. The last stop is the massive waterfall Gullfoss. Although it's neither the largest nor tallest, it is arguably one of Iceland most beautiful waterfalls with its two plateaus of which the lower has a drop of 21 meters.

GEOHERMAL NATURE BATHS - 12 AUG 2023

The area around Mývatn is a hotspot for geological activity, and one of the by-products is geothermal water - some of which has been used to form the Jarðbödin Nature Baths. The Nature Baths' lagoon is manmade, but the water is drawn up from a 2500 metre deep hot spring, and is about 130 degrees C when it reaches the surface. This hot spring forms a basin which is then used to fill the lagoon. The lagoon itself averages between 36-40 degrees C, and the water is rich with minerals that are considered to have a positive effect on skin.

In a canyon known as Jökulsárgljúfur, visitors can witness many of these magnificent waterfalls - including one of the most powerful waterfalls in Europe: Dettifoss. Within walking distance (around 1km) lies another breathtaking scene: the Selfoss waterfall, which cascades 11 meters down. Although Selfoss is not as tall, it is very wide and thus poses an awe-inspiring sight. The third waterfall is called Hafragilsfoss and is a true hidden gem in Iceland.
